PREFACE

The Telders International Law Moot Court Competition is a true student competition. The main objective is to stimulate students’ interest and knowledge of international law. It is an exceptional opportunity for the participants in a variety of ways. In taking part, students are educated in legal practice, and important principles, such as the rule of law and fair play. The Competition provides an excellent platform for promising young professionals to personally experience a close to reality court setting.

The first Telders Moot Court Competition was organized in 1977 on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Telders International Law Students Debating Society. The Competition has always taken place in the wonderful premises of the Peace Palace, at the heart of international justice. This year, preliminary rounds were staged in Ireland, England, The Netherlands, Romania, Czech Republic, Ukraine, and Switzerland. There were also universities who participated for the first time. These included the teams from Örebro University (Sweden), Masaryk University (Czech Republic), the European School of Law in Nova Gorica (Slovenia), The Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies (Switzerland), The Honourable Society of the Inner Temple (England), and Bocconi University (Italy).

At the 37th edition of the Telders Moot Court Competition, the students pleaded The Roundsian Rescue Dispute, a highly interesting case written by Ms. Kate Gibson, in which issues of immunity and the Court’s jurisdiction were the main themes. The written memorials that addressed these issues led to challenging exchanges of views both during the International Semi-Finals and finally before the Court in the Peace Palace.

The Supervisory Board and the Telders Organizing Office wish to express their gratitude to all sponsors which have pledged their support to the Telders Competition in many different ways.

The Supervisory Board congratulates the winning teams, and thanks all the talented teams which have taken part in the Competition. The Board would also like to thank all the Judges, members of the International Board of Review as well the Judge Assistants who donated their valuable time. They made the Telders Competition 2014 a most enjoyable event!

The Telders International Law Moot Court Competition is named after Professor Benjamin Marius Telders, who first became a professor of international law at Leiden University in 1931. Telders was extremely interested in why and how law operated. He considered international law to be a unique study and challenge, since it was—and in many respects still is—undefined and interwoven with history and politics. Professor Telders was respected for his sharp mind and frequently had the honour to represent his country, The Netherlands, before the Permanent Court of International Justice, predecessor of the International Court of Justice.

His interests and activities were not, however, limited to international law. Professor Telders was a man who enjoyed life to the full. He spent his time doing various other activities as playing the piano, editing a literary magazine and leading a political party. These other activities complemented his duties as a professor and a lawyer.

His approach to law was a practical one. Problems were meant to be solved, but not in contravention with important legal principles such as the rule of law and civil society. Professor Telders stood and fought for those principles even in the most difficult of times during the Second World War. Even being imprisoned for four and a half years did not break him morally or mentally, but made him more determined. He continued to write about international law, using a small pencil and match sticks. His fellow prisoners had great respect for his ability to put moral guidance and leadership into practice. Professor Telders died in the concentration camp of Bergen-Belsen in April 1945.

Two years later, in 1947, former students of Professor Telders founded the Telders Students Society of International Law (Telders Dispuut) in commemoration of their Professor. The first Telders International Law Moot Court Competition was organised in 1977 on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Telders Students Society for International Law.

Now, 37 years later after the first competition, the Telders Moot Court continues to maintain and live up to the legacy of the learned professor of international law.

Our adventure began in October 2013 when we found out that we had been selected to represent The Hague University of Applied Sciences in the Telders International Law Moot Court Competition, one of the most prestigious international law moot courts in the world.

To our surprise, our team was to be composed of only the two of us: Maria della Porta Rodiani and Olivia Flasch, fourth year and third year student in the LL.B. programme in International and European Law.

As soon as we received the news, we began preparing for the National Pre-selection Round that would take place the following March. We were to compete against the University of Utrecht and the University of Groningen, and only one team could proceed to the International Rounds.

After two intense moot court sessions that March, the Organizing Committee announced that we had won over the other two Dutch universities with a margin of forty points. We were ecstatic. It was the first time that The Hague University had passed through the National Round.

After a week of celebrations, we were ready to continue our journey to the International Rounds. Six weeks of intensive practice followed. Finally, the time had come for the International Rounds. We faced four teams in two days of highly tense and adrenaline-filled moot court sessions.

As a team of two we had to represent both parties in the dispute. While being challenging at times, this duet set-up landed us a place in the Final Round. On the 25th of April 2014, we competed against the Estonian team in the Grand Hall of the International Court of Justice before three actual judges of the Court. The room was silent as both parties presented their arguments, and reacted to the intriguing questions posed by the judges. Upon conclusion of the harangues, the judges retreated to deliberate. When they returned, they announced that we had won the 37th edition of the Telders International Law Moot Court Competition.

It was thanks to our extensive preparation, determination, and dedication of our coaches that we were able to show such confidence in the courtroom and achieve these unprecedented results. The Telders experience has marked a significant moment in our intellectual development and future endeavours, one that we will never forget.

Maria della Porta Rodiani & Olivia Flasch
Telders – at first none of us really knew what we were getting ourselves into. We had heard horror stories of sleepless nights and failed tests but the mentality was: “We are doing this, and we’re going all-in!” As most of us, we got off to a rocky start, some of the legal problems seemed impossibly biased and moments of despair and anger went hand in hand with trying to understand what we are up against. Suddenly, it all changed: solutions to problems started popping into our minds and before we knew it, the Roundsian Rescue Dispute was all we could speak of when we saw each other in hallways or meeting rooms. The three keywords that helped achieve what seemed impossible at first were research, research and… Oh, right, research!

By January, being the self-learned experts we surely were, it was time to practise the speeches. “Now comes the fun part!” we thought, feeling invincible, as we had managed to send our written memorials to the Hague after polishing them for 30 hours straight, through days and nights. Turns out we were horrible at speaking at first. Kind of weird that expressing your thoughts clearly can be so difficult, after all, we’ve all been babbling since we were 2. Maybe it was because all we had done for the past month was silently typing on our computers. Alas, hard work paid off again, soon we were able to speak without confusing Roundsia and Achtagonia and everything was going smoothly. Well, at least as smooth as very fine sandpaper.

“The Hague, we made it! So much to see, so much to do,” we thought, until a stern voice from our coach Maarja reminded us we were there to compete. Starting a revolution did not work so we silently accepted our fate. In the semi-finals, we were up against heavy competition, some nice, and well, some not so nice judges. We managed not to shake too much during our speeches and not spill water all over ourselves, so the judges apparently seemed impressed by the things we were very confidently speaking about but actually were not so sure of. And here comes the number one parental advice for the competitors of years to come – Whatever you say or do, be confident, but remember, confidence does not equal arrogance.

Whoa! What? Really? The FINAL!? Wait, we are from Estonia, right? When we had double-checked our nationalities on our ID-cards, we started to realize what had just happened. What an utter shock, we cannot properly attend Thursday’s party because of the final the next day. But seriously now, we were ecstatic and shaking with disbelief when we were declared the finalists. Tears were shed, moms were called.

There really isn’t much to say about the final, you had to be there to experience the Court room, the dignified aura of the ICJ judges and the almost electric tension in the air. In the end, it was the most powerful, yet humbling feeling any of us had ever felt. We have to give it to the winners - you were excellent!

In conclusion, participating in the Telders Moot Court Competition is undoubtedly the most time-consuming, most stressful, most angering, yet the best thing that has happened to any of us. Looking back, we would do it again in a heartbeat.
